

Dr. Jennifer Jackson, PhD, RN

Dr. Jennifer Jackson, PhD, RN is an assistant professor in the Faculty of Nursing at the University of Calgary. She studies nursing work and health systems in the context of community-based harm reduction services, as part of the WISHES research team. She aims to create effective healthcare services and remove structural barriers to accessing care. Her work includes a cost analysis of supervised consumption services, a study of needle debris, and staff experiences of nurses and peer support workers. She also uses innovative qualitative methods in her work.
